

IMAGINE IF THIS

"26 million people in Europe are looking for work. And whose job are they after?"

– UKIP poster April 2014

"Q: Should British people be wary of Romanian families moving into their street?"

A: Well of course, yeah."

– Nigel Farage interviewed by the Guardian 26.04.14

"I've signed the petition – you should too! Remember it'll be the Albanians next"

– Nigel Farage writing in the Express 1.11.13

ACTUALLY SAID THIS

"26 million people in Africa are looking for work. And whose job are they after?"

"Q: Should British people be wary of Indian families moving into their street?"

A: Well of course, yeah."

"I've signed the petition – you should too! Remember it'll be the Jamaicans next"

It would be unacceptable for a political party to make the statements on the bottom. To make these claims about Africans, Indians and Jamaicans would prompt an outcry. So why is it acceptable for UKIP to talk about Europeans, Romanians and Albanians in this way?
